81	Article 229 of the Law of the People's Republic of China on the Protection of Consumer Rights and Interests (hereinafter referred to as the "Law") stipulates that the business operator shall provide the consumer with the true and accurate information about the quality, performance, price, and other matters of the goods or services provided, and shall not engage in false or misleading advertising. The business operator shall also provide the consumer with the true and accurate information about the origin, production date, and other matters of the goods or services provided, and shall not engage in false or misleading advertising. Wang, a consumer, purchased a pair of shoes from a store. The store claimed that the shoes were made of genuine leather and were of high quality. However, after Wang wore the shoes for a short time, he found that the shoes were made of cheap synthetic material and were of poor quality. Wang demanded that the store refund his money and compensate him for the loss of his time and money. The store refused to do so, claiming that the shoes were indeed made of genuine leather and were of high quality. Wang then filed a lawsuit against the store, claiming that the store had engaged in false or misleading advertising and had violated the Law. The court found that the store had indeed engaged in false or misleading advertising and had violated the Law. The court ordered the store to refund Wang's money and compensate him for the loss of his time and money. The court also ordered the store to provide Wang with the true and accurate information about the origin, production date, and other matters of the shoes. The court's decision was based on the fact that the store had engaged in false or misleading advertising and had violated the Law. The court also found that the store had not provided Wang with the true and accurate information about the origin, production date, and other matters of the shoes.
